James Clarke and Co. Ltd was founded in 1859 on Fleet Street, London, and we have since developed into one of the world's leading theological publishers.

We originally published the highly influential Christian World magazine, which by the outbreak of the First World War was selling over 100,000 copies per week, making it the leading nonconformist weekly. Following this success, we began to publish books in the 1870s, and introduced British readers to major American preachers and theologians such as Henry Ward Beecher. Importing books from the United States was bold and unusual at a time when American publishing relied heavily on buying from Britain.

As we have specialised further in academic work, we have sustained our historic commitment to the debates and conversations unfolding in universities and theological colleges across the world.

James Clarke & Co. is now based in Cambridge, and publishes around fifty new titles per year.
